Caught an Arctic Pelican. Old Tom Cleflan is an industrious

Scotchman who has his dwelling on the baoks of the artificial reservoir which supplies the city of Fostoria, O., and its numerous factories with water.

On day recently be espied a large white bird floating upon the lake, and, taking his gun, he succeeded in creeping within a tew feet of the majestic stranger. He fired upon it a tremendous load of shot from his gun, which he had previously loaded for "banshees" and brownies.

The pelican only ducked iis head and evinced but slight lajury from the heavy charge of shot. The old man fired again, and this time the bird floundered desperately, but was unable to rise. He then threw off his clothes, swam to the crippled bird, and at-tempted to seize it in his mouth and swim to shore with it; but the strange bird dexterously besmeared the old man's bald head with a kind of muscus or saliva, and then, distending its cavernous pouch beneath its throat, opened its mouth and jammed its head and throat down over old Tom's head, neatly encasing the latter in its spacious pouch

Being thus completely circumvented in his efforts to capture his prize the old man pulled out for the shore with lusty strokes, towing in his wake his prize. On reaching the shore some persons seized the indomitable bird by the legs and another of the party grasped the old man in like manner, and, taking a steady pull, they released him from the membranous prison in which his head had been ensuared by the huge

Old Tom, it is needless to state, immediately dispatched the bird, not even waiting to put on his shirt and pants. The bird is now on exhibition in Fostoria, and is not of the common species of pelican, but belongs to a very rare species inhabiting Behring strait and the Arctic regions. It is much larger than the common species, and the poach at its throat is proportionately arger.

Prof. William Osborn, of Fostoria, a naturalist well versed in ornithology, and who has traveled extensively in FERTILIZERS and who has traveled extensively in nearly every remote portion of the globe, examined the bird and pronounced it an exceedingly rare specimen of the great Arctic pelican. In its native haunts it is said to subsist upon young seals, halibut and other large fish. Why and how it became isolated and wandered so far from its native place of abode is a poser that no one in that section can unravel.—St. Louis

The Black Death.

This terrible disease made its first authentically recorded appearance in Europe during the reign of Emperor Justinian, when from 5,000 to 10,000 deaths are said to have occurred daily at Constantinople. During the middle ages numerous epidemics of this fearful courge swept off thousands, if not millions, of victims throughout Asia, Afnry being especially marked by its fatal prevalence. In 1333 one fourth of the population, it is believed, perished of it in China. Thence it spread to the western countries of Asia to Arabia, Syria, and Egypt and the eastern and southern countries of Europe.

Of the frightful devastation wrought by it in England in 1347-1350, Mr. Longman in his "Life and Times of Edward III." gives a vivid picture. More than one-half, he estimates, of the population of England and Wales, then amounting to between 3,000,000 and 4,000,000, died. Parliament was several times prorogued on account of the great increase of the pestilence, and on June 18, 1350, a proclamation regulating wages was issued, "because a great part of our people is dead with the plague." In the West and East Ridings of Yorkshire more than half of the priests died, while in the diocese of Norwich 1,000 out of 1,500 parishes CAKES,

The black death appeared last in England in 1665, when 100,000 persons within the bills of mortality perished. Defoe's account of its horrors, as witnessed in London, is well known; but an even more realistic description of its ravages is that drawn by Dr. Nathaniel Hodges, a London physician, who bravely remained at his post throughout the awild visitation, ministering to the stricken inhalitents of the stricken inhalitent inhalitents of the stricken inhalitents of the stricken inhalitent inhalite stricken inhabitants of the metropolis, and who lived to be confined for in Ludgate prison, where he died in 1688.—Pittsburg Dispatch.

PIANOS AND ORGANS.

THE KIMBALL PIANO WORD CONTEST [From the Washington Sunday Post.]

T. H. Netherland.

There are several thousand people in Washington who will have a hard time trying to forget that "Kimball pianos are best." This sentence has haunted them during their waking hours and been with them in their dreams for the past two months. Wherever they look these words stand out in bold relief like the "handwriting on the walt." They have dissected this sentence in a thousand different ways, and each has seen in his mind's eye the magnificent Hungarian ask piano by o'Neal & Lunt, Auctioneers.

Which the Kimball company would give as a prize to that person who should form the greatest number of words out of the sentence.

"Kimball pianos are best." Last Thursday night at 8 o'clock the spacious warerooms of the Kimball Piano Company in the Metzerott Building, Washington, were througed with an eager crowd, who were present through the invitation of Manager W. B. Price to hear the verdict of the judges. Mr. W. A. Croffort, tott, of the United States Geological Survey, acted as spokesman and announced that Mr. T. H. Netherland, residing at No. 211 north Alfred street, Alexandria, Va. and a stenographer in the Law Division of the Pension Office, had outstripped all competitors with a record of 6,031 words, the entire list containing but four errors, and upon this decision. eye the magnificent Hungarian ash piano which the Kimball company would give as a prize to that person who should form the greatest number of words out of the sentence. excited more spirited competition, and any future announcement of the Kimball com-pany will be regarded with great interest by
